Lies My Father Told Me: A true story

Life in a Montreal immigrant ghetto during the 1920s was such a telling experience for writer Ted Allen that it needed three distinct formats—a short story, a radio play and now a motion picture—to do it justice. A composite of Allen's childhood, the movie explores his relationship with dio revival brought the story to the attention of a film producer. The movie, released in 1975, was described by critic Judith Crist as a "warm and funny and touching tale."

his bewhiskered lovable grandfather and his ambitious inventor father.

When a magazine editor needed a short story in 1949, Allen dashed out a 26-page tale in three hours, receiving the handsome sum of five dollars. He was then quickly commissioned to write a radio play based on his story. A mid-1960s ra-

Allen wants audiences to realize that "it's a true story, 98 percent so." He insists the inventions—from expandable cuff links to creaseless pants—were actual items. "Nobody could have made up those inventions of my father's," Allen adds.

The Blue Bird flies from Russia with love

The third screen adaptation of The Blue Bird makes a unique contribution to both foreign policy and film finance. The story of two children on a magical search for the blue bird of happiness, the movie stars Liz Taylor, Jane Fonda and Cicely Tyson. Co-produced, co-financed and co-distributed by Russian and American groups, The Blue Bird is the first movie jointly done by the world's most unlikely business partners.

After a U.S.—Hungarian association during the filming of The Fixer in 1968 proved to be beneficial to both countries, the U.S.S.R. hinted that it, too, wanted to be in pictures. In 1975, after détente had finally cleared the way, The Blue Bird began shooting in Leningrad.

Cold, cuisine and communication were the major stumbling blocks. The shivering cast traded various strains of communist flu all winter, while packages from London's Fortnum and Mason fought off borscht boredom. It was not uncommon to take an hour to explain a particular direction to Russian technicians. As Jane Fonda succinctly described the situation: "It's a little like détente itself. Shaky but holding together."

The great Fanny Brice is the Funny Lady Barbra Streisand brings to the screen

Few lives are interesting enough to generate a readable paperback, yet the story of the incomparable Fanny Brice led to a best-selling biography, a record-breaking Broadway musical and Oscar-winning movie, Funny Girl, and now the long awaited sequel, on HBO this month, Funny Lady.

Life and love were never easy for Fanny. Her saga began in 1905, when, at 13, she won an amateur night contest in Brooklyn. A winding road took her from talent nights to road shows and burlesque before ending in a role in "College Girl." When Fanny went on stage, singing an Irving Berlin song with a Yiddish accent, it was clear she was a great comedienne. In 1910 Flo Ziegfeld saw her, signed her and starred her in his Ziegfeld Follies.

Fanny's marriage to gambler Nicky Arnstein brought both pain and fame. In 1920, "My Man," her torch song to Arnstein—then on the run from a swindling charge—brought the house down. Famed as Fanny's song for years, Funny Lady star Streisand gave it new life.

Fanny was often funny about something that had caused her pain. Asked about her early career she quipped: "Listen kid! I've done everything in theatre except marry a property man."

Fanny divorced Arnstein in 1927 and two years later married Broadway showman Billy Rose.

As shown in Funny Lady her love for Nicky lingered on through the nine years of her marriage to Rose. "I never loved the man I liked and I never liked the man I loved," she said. However, Fanny kept smiling. As radio's "Baby Snooks," she amused listeners until she died in 1951.

Ray Stark, Fanny's son-in-law (and the producer of both Funny Girl and Funny Lady) once wrote, "That honesty and that strength—they brought her wonderful things, and heartbreak. She never regretted any of it, including the heartbreak."

The Blue Bird Two children embark on a magical mystery tour in search of the elusive blue bird of happiness. Elizabeth Taylor, Jane Fonda and Cicely Tyson star in this lavish Russian-American production. Also featured are members of the Moscow Circus and Kirov Ballet Company. (G-1:38) December 12, 17, 20, 25, 28

Dead Cert An amateur jockey risks life and limb to expose a gambling syndicate attempting to fix the British Grand National. Scott Antony stars in this steeplechase thriller highlighted by the colorful atmosphere of the famed British horse race. Directed by Tony Richardson. (1:32) December 17, 18, 21, 23, 29

Funny Lady Barbra Streisand resumes her Oscar-winning portrayal of everybody's favorite funny girl. Her love for ex-spouse Nicky Arnstein (Omar Sharif) threatens Fanny Brice's marriage to Broadway songwriter Billy Rose (James Caan). As The New York Times put it, "as long as Miss Streisand is singing the blues or singing anything else, Funny Lady is superb entertainment." (PG-2:20) December 19, 24, 28

The Killer Elite James Caan and Robert Duvall are assassins-for-hire in this tale of intrigue and double cross in the murky intelligence underworld. Sam Peckinpah directed this story of, as The New York Times said, "people who do dirty tricks for the CIA and discover that the tricks as well as the dirt are on them." Timing can be crucial in both film making and horse racing. The importance of waiting for just the right moment can be seen in the story behind Dead Cert, the pulse-pounding tale of a jockey's single-handed attempt to "unfix" the British Grand National. Writer Dick Francis waited 11 years for the "right" director before bringing his 1962 best-selling thriller to the screen.

Ten months after his horse mysteriously faltered only 50 yards from victory in the 1956 Grand National steeplechase, jockey Francis decided to start writing instead of riding. His 14 thrillers about horse racing have since sold more than five million copies and have been praised by The New York Times as "probably the best sports detective works ever written."

To bring Dead Cert, Francis' first novel, to the screen as realistically as he had written it required the skills of famed director Tony Richardson. Three months of shooting followed, climaxing in a staggering re-staging of the Grand National, a race on a par with the Kentucky Derby. The race had been filmed in March during its annual running, but Francis' and Richardson's penchant for detail required a realistic duplication for the film's shocking finale.

The Killer Elite

James Caan's appetite for sports of any variety has earned him a "jock of all trades" title. Considering the physical demands of recent roles, including the assassin-for-hire in The Killer Elite, it's a title he needs.

At age 16, Caan won an athletic scholarship to Michigan State. "I played freshman football, but they sent me home in a box," he said. "It was just too hard at that age." Caan switched to Hofstra, but after one year he joined the Neighborhood Playhouse. "Acting was the only thing that had any interest for me for more than two weeks."

Ironically, Caan rose to stardom as football player Brian Piccolo in Brian's Song. "It was my childhood fantasy to play with the Chicago Bears," he said. His success as Sonny in The Godfather made Caan a superstar. In Rollerball he had a chance to indulge another sports fantasy. Caan has been competing on the rodeo circuit for five years and is now looking for a script about his second vocation to prove again he's a good actor and a good sport.

Burt Reynolds, Gene Hackman and Liza Minnelli in Lucky Lady

Rumrunner Reynolds joins Hackman, Minnelli aboard the sassy, smuggling Lucky Lady

"I don't get no respect" could be the refrain of Lucky Lady star Burt Reynolds as well as Rodney Dangerfield. But cast opposite Gene Hackman and Liza Minnelli as one of a trio of comical Prohibition smugglers, Reynolds earned recognition for his acting ability as well as his sex appeal.

Reynolds graduated to acting after a collision with a trailer truck ended a promising future as a pro halfback. Reynolds had many part-time jobs, before acting lessons and some luck brought him to the attention of a TV studio. "I did an audition for MCA," said Reynolds. "Right in the middle of my scene, the phone rang, so I just pulled the phone out of the wall.

They liked that and they took me on." A seven-year contract followed and he soon was a regular on the TV series Riverboat.

A fight with a co-worker cost Reynolds his lucrative contract. However, his appearances in a series of films he describes as "the kind they show in airplanes and prisons because nobody can leave" kept him in the corner of the public eye.

After a one-shot appearance grew into a regular spot as Johnny Carson's Monday night replacement, Reynolds got his two biggest breaks. The macho lead in Deliverance earned him an Academy Award nomination. A challenge from editor Helen Gurley Brown lead to break number two —the centerfold of Cosmopolitan.

Reynolds' work in Lucky Lady showed he had talent as well as toughness. "What I can do that very few of my contemporaries can," he says, "is have fun with a character. Light comedy is something that comes very naturally to me." His part in Peter Bogdanovich's forthcoming Nickelodeon should prove that point.

Russians are coming, Russians are coming!

Vladislav Tretiak, Victor Ivanov, Igor Vysotski and their comrades are coming. Tretiak is a show-stopping puck-stopper—perhaps the finest goalie on ice—and he will lead a top-flight Soviet squad against the New England Whalers Dec. 27 in Hartford.

Two top American players are among the Whalers: Gordie Roberts, an exceptional defenseman; and Larry Pleau, a high-scoring center.

Ivanov and Vysotski are on a team of 12 Soviet heavyweights that will fight a dozen of America's amateurs at Madison Square Garden Dec. 3. Both men were on the Russian team that came here last year. Ivanov won all three of his bouts in the first round and then went on to Montreal. Many felt Vysotski should have been given the Olympic assignment because he had twice beaten Cuba's gold medalist Teofilo Stephenson. But Vysotski has a troublesome problem when fighting several bouts in a short period: he cuts easily.

Among the U.S. fighters will be bronze medalist John Tate and Jimmy Clark. Clark and Vysotski met in a rousing slugfest a year ago. In the first round, Vysotski decked Clark, who came back with flurries of punches and won a TKO in the third and final round. Herman Weiskopf Pro basketball's one-man version of the Big Red Machine—6' 8", 230-pound Dave Cowens—and the rest of the Boston Celtics will take on the Phoenix Suns on Dec. 10. The rambling redhead should be all geared up for this game at the Boston Garden, for it will be a rematch of last season's NBA finalists.

Not that Cowens really needs to be prodded; he has always been a nonstop go-getter from the opening tipoff. During his six years with Boston he has averaged 19.1 points and 15.5 rebounds a game.

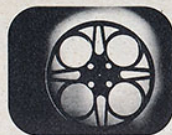

Cowens has turned in many memorable performances. One of his most spectacular was in the 1974 playoffs against Buffalo. The Celtics trailed by 17 points late in the third quarter, but went on to win thanks to the indefatigable Cowens. In the fourth period he latched on to nine rebounds, blocked three shots and scored 20 points, 14 of them in a hard-to-believe spree lasting only four-and-a-half minutes.

HBO will carry many other NBA games this month, including a Dec. 2 contest in which the Golden State Warriors will be at home against the San Antonio Spurs. Exciting NHL hockey action is also on tap.

There will also be top college basketball from Madison Square Garden on Dec. 29 and 30 when HBO presents the ECAC Holiday Festival.

That's not all. Hard to Make It in This League II, a movie about the rigors of life in the NFL, will be shown on Dec. 13 and 18. There will also be professional wrestling from Madison Square Garden on Dec. 20, gymnastics from Toronto on Dec. 6 and 11 and highlights from the Skate Canada international competition on Dec. 4 and 25.

Smokey Joe's Revenge

Smokey Joe is a rusty old steam roller whose owner gives it to three children, who restore Smokey to its former glory. After Smokey takes first place in a competition against its ex-owner's new machine, the disgruntled Mr. Williams decides to reclaim Smokey Joe. The children seem helpless until Smokey Joe rolls to the rescue.

On Location: Laughs '76

This New Year's Eve, have a laugh on Home Box Office. In a comic climax to 1976, HBO will bring you eight of the great comedians who have appeared On Location this year.

Since it began, HBO's On Location series has been acclaimed for its innovations in capturing the excitement of live, uninterrupted and uncensored performances. From veterans like Henny Youngman, Myron Cohen and Rodney Dangerfield to stars like Mort Sahl, David Steinberg and David Brenner to new comedians like Steve Martin and Freddie Prinze and his friends at the Improv in L.A., it will be a fun-filled evening you won't want to miss.
